The Prayer of a wise Heathen.

GREAT Jove, this one petition grant;
(Thou knowest best what mortals want :)
Ask'd, or unask'd what's good supply ;
What's evil to our pray'rs deny !

J E S T S.

WHEN Lord Chesterfield's Letters were published, a Gentleman asked Doctor Johnson, whether they did not contain great Knowledge of the World ? O yes, Sir, says Johnson, very much so ; they inculcate the Morals of a Whore, and the Manners of a Dancing-master.

Henry IV. of France, reading the following ostentatious Inscription on the Monument of a Spanish Officer; "Here lies the Body of Don, &c. &c. who never knew what Fear was." Then, says the King, he never snuff'd a Candle with his Fingers.

An Officer in Minorca was found by a Gentleman, who came to visit him in a Morning, a little ruffled, and being asked the Reason, he replied, that he had lost a Pair of fine Black Silk Stockings out of his Room, that cost him Eighteen Shillings ; but he hoped he should get them again, for he had ordered them to be cried, with a Reward of Half a Crown for the Person who brought them. His Friend observing, that this was too poor a Recompence for such a Pair of Silk Stockings : Phoh, Man, replied he, I directed the Crier to say they were Worsted.

A Countryman sowing his Field, and two smart Fellows riding by, one of 'em call'd to him with an insolent Air ; Well, honest Countryman, it is your Business to sow, but we reap the Fruits of your Labour. To which the Farmer replied, It is very likely you may, for truly I am sowing Hemp.

A Gentleman seeing Beau Nash go out very finely dressed, after the mutual Compliments, asked where he was going ? Going ! says Nash, why, I am going to advertise : What ? says the Gentleman. Why myself, quoth Nash, for that's the only Use of a fine Coat.

The Miser and the Mouse.

AS Pedro stalk'd around his house,
The jealous miser spy'd a mouse:
" How now, cries he, what dost thou here ? "
" Sir, says the mouse, dismiss your fear ;
" I come not with the hopes of food,
" But for the sake of—solitude."

A remarkable Story of a HERMIT.

ACertain holy hermit, named Parnhe, being upon the road to meet his bishop, who had sent for him, met a lady most magnificently dressed, whose incomparable beauty drew the eyes of every body on her. The saint, having looked at her, and being himself struck with astonishment, immediately burst into tears. Those who were with him wondering to see him weep, demanded the cause of his grief. " I have two reasons, replied he, for my tears ; I weep to think how fatal an impression that woman makes on all who behold her ; and I am touched with sorrow, when I reflect that I, for my salvation, and to please God, have never taken one tenth part of the pains which this woman has taken to please men alone."

AN E C D O T E S of the great Marshal TURENNE.

THE generosity and disinterestedness of Turenne, were upon every occasion manifest. In the campaign of 1673 a general officer proposed to him the means of obtaining the sum of four hundred thousand livres, without the court being ever able to discover it. " I am much obliged to you," replied Turenne ; " but as I have often had these opportunities, without profiting by them, I do not believe at this time of life, I shall ever alter my conduct."

About the same time the magistrates of a city offered him a hundred thousand crowns not to march over their district. " As," said he, " your city is not in the route which the army is to take, I cannot accept of your money."

The success with which the campaign of 1673 was crowned, procured the general the most gracious reception at Versailles. Lewis XIV. failed not to beitow his commendations on Turenne; and that Prince told him that the marquis S. Abré should serve no longer under him, as he had in his letters to the Minister condemned some measures taken by Turenne. "Why did he not," said the general, "communicate his opinion to me, I should have availed myself of his advice." He apologized for S. Abré, praised his conduct, and obtained promotion for him.

Rousseau gives us the following anecdote of this general. Once in dog-days, M. Turenne being very warm had Ript himself, and was looking out of his window in the anti-chamber, in a linen waistcoat, and white night-cap. One of the servants coming in, and taking him for an under-cook with whom he was very familiar, came softly up, and with a pretty heavy hand, hit the general a very smart slap upon the breech. He immediately turned about, when the servant perceiving his mistake, fell on his knees, saying "My Lord, I thought it was George." "Well, and if it had been George," said Turenne, rubbing the part aggrieved; "you need not have hit him so cursed hard."

A Clown's Apology to the Doctor.

A S honest Richard, a substantial clown,
Had brought his corn, one market-day, to town,
He met the Doctor, who look'd vastly big,
And verily srown'd beneath his awful wig.
The clown, whose heart still ran upon his treasure:
Thus gess'd the cause of Syrinx's displeasure:
" I hasn't been lately at your shop, quoth Dick;
" But don't be angry—for I hasn't been sick."
